GLIMPSE ON TECH UPDATE- JAN

NASA announced that it will be working with Boeing on a new project. The aim is to increase the fuel efficiency of aircraft to cut emissions and decrease the impact on the planet of taking a plane.

"Most of you all think of NASA as a space agency and as an aviation agency. It's also a climate agency," said NASA administrator Bill Nelson. The project is an important initiative, given many people are trying to limit plane travel to avoid emissions.

Microsoft announced a new phase of its partnership with OpenAI with a multiyear, multibillion-dollar investment to accelerate AI breakthroughs. The goal of the partnership is to ensure these benefits are broadly shared with the world. The agreement includes scaling supercomputers for OpenAI's research, deploying OpenAI's models across all Microsoft products, and integrating Azure into OpenAI's work.

Google, Scared by ChatGPT, Declared 'Code Red' for AI Development

When ChatGPT wowed the world with its ability to answer questions conversationally, the biggest search engine in the world got scared. Founders of Google, Larry Page and Sergey Brin, were brought into several emergency meetings concerning ChatGPT last month. Many have noted that the large language model might threaten Google Search's $149B business. In the aim to stay ahead of this new competition, CEO Sundar Pichai declared a "code red" to spur new AI development and hopes to reveal 20 new products within the year.
